THE AIMS OF THE EISS

The European Initiative for Security Studies (EISS) is a pan-European multidisciplinary network of scholars that share the goal of consolidating security studies in Europe. It is the largest and most diverse network of its kind. For one, EISS seeks to develop and sustain a Europe-wide network in the field of security studies. This gives visibility to the range of individual and collective research projects that are currently underway in Europe. Furthermore, it aims to establish a forum for the exchange of ideas in order to foster new joint research projects and develop international research partnerships.

The EISS has three main characteristics: it is (1) thematically-driven and open to all theoretical approaches, (2) multidisciplinary and interdisciplinary, and (3) geographically inclusive. Firstly, the EISS is not limited to one specific theoretical approach to security studies, but instead seeks to be inclusive. This is reflected, for instance, in the EISS Conference's panels, which cover a large range of themes in the broad field of security studies. The EISS welcomes contributions on both so-called 'traditional' and 'non-traditional' security issues. Secondly, the EISS is multidisciplinary and interdisciplinary in that it gathers, among others, historians, political scientists, economists, geographers, anthropologists and sociologists sharing an interest in developing security studies in Europe. Finally, the EISS seeks to be as inclusive as possible from a geographical perspective, including scholars from all of Europe (Southern, Eastern, Northern and Western Europe). At the same time, the EISS welcomes projects focusing on any region of the world.

Thereby, the EISS pursues three main goals:

- To help overcome the existing fragmentation in the study of security and defence across Europe, and to foster and consolidate a truly European academic field of security studies.
- To contribute to promoting academic excellence in Europe and to nurture the development of a new generation of scholars with an expertise on international security issues
- To foster a network of academics who can contribute to public debates through academic research and instruction, and support informed judgment on security and defence issues within civil society.
